Citation 1

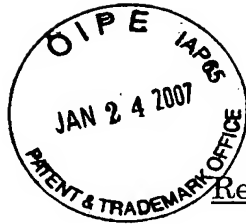

Remarks:

As referred to in Citation 1, for example, technology which:

preserves control information and which is provided with items which control the storage capacity when multiple storage devices are being used by the user, and items which accomplish control of the total usable capacity by the user using all of the multiple storage devices; and which accomplishes restriction so that, based on the control information, the storage capacity does not exceed the amount used by the user; and which changes the control information when the circumstances of use change, is already known. (Particular reference is made to Figures 8 and 9 and the corresponding notation).

In addition, design changes of the total amount and the setting aside of parts of the storage device is also nothing more than technical considerations which are generally accomplished.

Remaining points are simple design items.
